A new, formal and totally anonymous system for reporting misogyny in the academic environment and assault on and around campus is essential for the safety and welfare of women students.

King’s should provide counsellors from a diversity of backgrounds for the wellbeing of students who seek counselling services.

Staff and students have considerable input concerning the mentoring programme for women in academia that King’s is developing for March 2013.

The number of gender neutral toilets on campus should be increased for the wellbeing of non-binary students and staff at King’s.

The information service at King’s should be intersectional. I will work with others to distribute leaflets for many groups of women addressing health, mental wellbeing and vital, often overlooked, information for international students.

Women’s History Month is the perfect opportunity to highlight the current work of women at King’s. I would love to see the achievements of women at King’s celebrated through events such as talks and workshops, as well as via online media.
