Campaigning for an end to the raising of fees without due notice.

I propose to campaign for a cap on international student fees, and making it mandatory for notice to be given at least eight months prior to the raising of tuition fees. I also aim to mobilise international students to fight the proposed £200 NHS levy, and other xenophobic immigration policies that threaten our continued study. It should also be mandatory for us to receive notification on all policy changes (within King’s and otherwise). We deserve to be informed by our university on developments that affect our future in this country. I will also campaign to scrap the exorbitant overseas re-sit exam fee.

One of my goals is to introduce regularly updated leaflets that give out specific information for those new to the UK – particularly on issues such as housing, visa applications, reproductive health and mental health. This is information that we shouldn’t have to search for or be confused about – our university should be our first point of contact. Essential information should be easily accessible, and in wide circulation across campus. I will also push for a diverse counselling service that is sensitised to the particular struggles those away from their home country face. I will also support the struggles of the wider international community at King’s, especially those on minimum wage.
